CHAPTER XII .- CONTINUER

I had a high notion, those days, of the duty of a soldier. My father had always told me there was no greater glory for anybody than that of a brave death. Somelow the feeling got to be part of me. While I had little fear of track, I dreaded to be shot like a felon. But I should be dying for my country, and that feeling seemed to light the shadows. When I fell asleep, after much worry, it was to dream of my three countrymen who had failen their faces there by the corn. I awoke to dad the guard in our cell, and D'rl and he whispering together.

He had come with our breakfast. "Ail I want." D'ri was saying, "is plece of iron, with a sharp end, balf es long es yer arm."

He made no answer, that hig, sullen, bulldog man who brought our food to us. When he had gone, D'rt lay over and hegan laughling under his breaath.

"His thinker 's goln' iuk a sawmill," be wirlspered. "Would n't wonder ef It ken 'im awake nights. He was askin' 'bout thet nir tew thousand dollazz. If they It let us alone for three days, we 'll be out o' here. Now, you mark my word."

"How?" I inguired. "Jest a leetle job o' sildin' dewnlilli," he said. "There's a big drnin-pipe goes under this cell-t' the river, prob'ty. He says it 's bigger 'n n barrel." We saved our eandle that day, and walked up and dewn, from wall to wall, for exercise. Our hopea were high when we heard footsteps, but they fell suddenly, for, as we listened, we could hear the tramp of a squad of men. They came to our cell, and took us upstaira, blind-folded as before, to a bath-room, where the uniforms, discarded the day of our capture, were walting for us, newly pressed. Our bath over, they directed us to put them on. They gave us new lints, for our own had been lost the night of the wreck, covered our eyes, and led ua through many doora and alleya into the open air. It was dark, I knew, for as we entered a carrlage I could dimly see the glow of a loved me, lantern hanging over the wheel. The road. "Herton," said his lordship, as he sat down, leaning fazily on the arm of his chair, "will you have them bring down the prisoners?'

The servant left the room. Some of the men were talking together in low tones, they were mostly good-lookng and well dressed. "Gentiemen," said his lord-hip, rieing suddenly, "I'm going to turn you out of here for a morn at they're a shy let. Won't you go into the library?"

Then we heard heavy steps, the clink of scabbards on a stairway, the feet of ladics, and the swish of their gowns. With a quick movement our faces were uncovered. I rose to my feet, for there before me stood Louison and the Baroness de Ferre, between two guards, and, bebehind them, Louise, her eyes covered, her beautiful head bent low. I could see that she was erving. The truth came to me in a flash of thought. They had been taken after we left: they were prisoners brought here to identify us. A like quickness of perception had apparently come to all. We four stood looking at one another with no sign of recognition. My face may have shown the surprise and horror in me, but shortly I recovered my atony caim. The ladies were dressed finely, with the taste and care I had so much admired. Louison turned away from me with a splendid dignity and stood looking up at the wall, her hands behind her, a toe of one shoe tapping the floor lmpatiently. It was a pleture to remember a lifelime. I could feel my puise quicken as I looked upon her. The haroness stood, soher-faced, her eyes

I had a stout heart in me those days, but in all my life I had never taken a ride so little to my liking. We went over rough roads, up' hill and dewn, for an benr or more.

I could see in prospect no better destination than our graves, and, indeed, I was not far wrong. Well, by and by we came to a town somewhere-God knowa where. I have never seen it, or known the name of it, or even that of the prison where we were first in mured. I could tell it was a town by the rumble of the wheels and each echoing hoof-beat. The cavalcade was all about us, and now and then we could hear the sound of voices far behind. The procession slowed up, horsemen jammed to the left of ua, the carriage halted. I could hear footsteps on a stone pavement.

"You 're late," sald a low voice at the carriage door. "It 's near eleven." "Lot o' fooling with the candidates." said one of the horsemen, quictly. "Everything ready?"

Cool days are here now, and, in the morning, children crowd around the fire to warm toes and fingers before beginning the day's work. Teachers, have you ever thought of season the series stood nineteen to asking them or any one else where the heat of the fire comes from. If not, ask it now and let us see what white with St. Louis. ti is a good wathe answer will be.

It comes from the wood of course, but how and why? Those are the questions. Yet there will still be air in the jar.

What really takes place is this: The wood has in it a substance called carbon, not in a pure state lint; combined with other things. In the nir there is a large amount of a gaa, oxygen, which unites with this out of the game even when he is badly carbon. When those two things burt. unite they produce heat, and, two new substances, the gas which we call parbonic acid, or carbon dioxide, and water. These pass from the stove into the air, and with the un consumed carbon, make what we call amoke.

But there is yet another question back of this. Where did the heat come from? Was the heat created by the union of these two substances?

Delphine's Choice

By INA WRIGHT HANSON

Popyright, 1905, by 1. W. Hanson

Throwing down my paper, I started In acurch of Delphine. She was getting into her auto car with Jerry, the crook ed backed. He was of no more couse quence that a pet dog, except that his mind in his poor ngly body was like the pearl in the oyster shell, so he was more entertaining, and, hesides telug n mental gentus, terry could sing. Ye powers! Itow he could sing!

"Delphine," I began abruptly, "In Holland they have four Sundays in No-

"You don't sny!" raising slender hands in exaggerated surprise, "Do you suppose they ever have five?"

"Listen. Four Sundays, known as lteview, Decision, Purchase and Posseedon. On Heylew Sunday all the nu married men and women go to church look ut one another, but don't speak." "How stily!" remarked Delphine.

"On Decision Sunday each man who wants a wife bows low before the malden of his choice, and by her response be judges of her feetlugs toward libin."

Delphine tittered. "On I'mrchuse Sunday he askes ber parents' consent, and on Possession Sunday they appear as actual or prospective brides and grooms. I am telling you because I was once foolish enough to promise not to ask you to marry me. I beg to remind you that next Sunday is Decision Sunday, the second in November, also that there is more than one way to kill a cat."

Delphine regarded me with amusement. "Dick, I think you are the silliest ever," she laughed as she and the anto and Jerry went speeding away.

I looked after them, the girl's lithe young figure, with the bine vell streaming out in the silf sea breeze, and Jerry's puthetic form beside her. Jerry's voice was music liself, and Jerry's handsome eves could sneak more eloquently than a hundred longues. But what had I to fear from a crooked larck?

That evening no egotism was slightly isrred. Huthaway of the bland head and the big heart joined me on the porch. Hathaway was lubbling over with something too good to keep, After five minutes' conversation I ferrned that Miss Leiphine had once more made him promise that he should not court her and that today she had told ldm on interesting tale of how the men of Copenhagen or South Africa or some other durined place get their wives. And why should she tell him all that unless she was hinting to him of an honorable way to break au unwilling promise?

Wity, Indeed? I though wrathfully as later and alone I brooded over the matter, leaving Huthaway and a dozen others to dance with Delphine at the easino. I had other tish to fry, and I was going to fry them good and brown too. At last my planes were perfected. the reluctant Itathaway and finally cajoied him into doing what I wanted. On Sanday morning, when Delphine and her father came out of church, their astonished eyes beheld twelve men lined up near the red auto. Twelve? My pity for poor Jerry was forgotten at helphine's welcome. Surely there was an answer to my warm pressure of her little hand; surely her dark eyes held in their rogulsh depths a gleini of love. "Wouldn't It Jar You?"

Once W. P. Gibson, their editor of Puck, took luncueon with Opper, the carlooulst, at his home in Bensonhurst. The heat and bis guest were smoking postprandial eigars on the veranda vhen Mr. Opper became convulsed with laughter at the sight of one of his pupples tearing to pieces Mr. Gibon's list. Gibson was inclined to harsb measures, but Opper reminded lilm that the dog was only a puppy that knew no better, and the editor became resigned. When Gibson rose to teave Opper offered him the choice of all his hals. "I don't need one," returned the guest. "It was your but, not mine." The immor of the situation did not strike the comic artist at ouce, but later he made use of the incident in one of his celebrated series, "Now, Wouldn't It Jar You?" the question being, "If your dog tore up what you thought was your neighbor's hat and you found it was your own, wouldn't it jar you?"-Everybody's Magazine.

Mindbad's Alleged Prototype.

The story of Sindbad the Sallor is believed to owe n good deal to the legend of St. Brendan, the Kerry sulnt, whose day is May 1d. According to the legend, St. Brendan salled the ocean for seven years in search of the Island that had and it cures the cold. That's once been Adam's Eden. During that time he regularly revisited the Island of Sheep, where the rheep are as large ns oxen; the Island of Birds, that are really fallen angels, and another island which is really a big fish named Jascon trying to get his tall into his mouth. St. Brendan used to enemp on the fish on Easter day and go on to the birds on Easter Monday. He found the Eden Island at last, but no one has seen it since, though it appeared on seventeenth century maps and in an eighteeuth century trenty between Spain and Portugal. Probably Irish monks took this legend with them to the east in the ninth century.- Loudon Institutions of Learning. To-day, in the United States, two radically different plana for the support and conduct of higher institutions of dearning are in process of development; the one that of the private university, the other the university supported and controlled by the state. The first finds its notable examples mainly amongst the older universities of the east, the second in the universities of the central and western states, writes Henry S. Pritchett, in Atlantic. While these last are younger, their growth has been rapid, not only in the number of their Instructors and students, but in facili-Ries and in income. A table which foilows, contains in condensed form eer-Jain data concerning these two groups of universities which are suggestive. and which show how nearly comparable, so far as material considerations measure equality, these two groups of institutiona have become. The comparison shows that in the six older universities of the eastern atates 1,938 teachers are dealing with 18,498 students, at an anmual cost of a little more than $5,000,-000, while in the six western state universities a somewhat smaller number of teachers in dealing with a student body Jarger by 2,000, at a cost of a little more than $4,000,000. According to the most up-to-date and successful aeronaut of the century, A. Roy Enabenshue, all hope of successfully navigating the air in a practical and useful way may as well be abanfloned. Speaking from experience, ho said. "I am ready to state positively that the airship in general never will be a success. I believe it is now at the height of its achievement." After telling of certain requisites and what he had accomplished he went on to state 1'10 reasons for his conclusion. The first is: "Above 15 miles an hour the pitch is so great that one cannot ride. . . . There is no way to controi this, as we cannot make a vacuum of the currents we meet above the lower levels. The aecond reason lies in the weight. I have built this as light as it can be done and still be propelled. I am tired of all this twaddle about aerial navigation. I know that it has uo future from my own experience. Dreamers have tried for ages to make something of their theories, but ail have failed and will fail. I am about to give up the profession and buy a farm." This is good sense, but others will continue to dream and fall.

Do not hypnotize yourself with the Idea that you are being kept down. Do not talk such nonsense, advises Success Magazine. Nobody of any sense would believe it. People will only laugh at you. Only one thing is keeping you down and that is yourself. There is probably some trouble somewhere with you. Of course, there are employers who are unjust to their help; there are instances in which employes are kept back when they should be advanced, but they usually find lily. their level somewhere.

"The burning of the battleship Mikasa was attended by many heroic ineldents. There was not one, but a series of explosions, some loud like the simultaneous reports of many heavy guns, others duli and muffled. Immediately after the first of these great sheets of flame seemed to envelop the ship. It was a moonlight night, added to which all the warships and land stations turned searchights upon the scene. This coneentralion of light, together with the glare of the conflagration, made it possible to witness many heartrending spectacies from shore and also materially assisted the work of rescue. Comment and Suggestive Thought. INTRODUCTORY. - Zecharlah (the Lord remembers) was the son of Barachiah and grandaon of iddo, who was one of the heads of the twelve courses of priests (Neh. 12:4, 7), and whose successor Zecharlah became (Neh. 12:161. He was therefore a priest as well as a prophet, the head of one of the Davidic courses of priests. He was probably born in Babylon, and went to Jerusalem when quite young, with Zerubbabel and Joshua. He began to propheny about two nunths after Haggal liegan (Xech. 1:1; Ezra. 5:1; 6:14; Hag. 1:1), in the second year of Darlus Hystaspes, and continued to prophesy for two years (Zech. 7:1). The circumstances were those described in our last lesson. The people had just been awakanew to build the temple, amid the rulns of the old. They were few. Most of them were poor. They were discouraged. Their enemies were persistent and cruel. They were trying to bring the whole power of the empire against those few people and shelr feeble enteraroused enthusiasm and the work on in the military unacoun at Toklo. the temple had begun. It had been go-Ing on but a few weeks when the younger prophet Zecharlah came to his aid. ecy of Haggsi, who followed with two more messages from God Then Zechnrialt came again upon the scene, ti ree months after his first prophecy, in Janunry, or February, 519, when one memseries of eight vi ions living pictures -object lesson which the prophet regressing he brought another mes ago from the Lord The Jews, we are told, 'prospered through the prophessing'

V 7. "Who art thou, O great mountain?" The difficulties, the opposition of the world power of l'ersia, the poverty, the ruins, the sins, and indifferonce of some of the Jews, the hatred of the Samarlians, all rose up before the prophet like a huge range of mountains, proud, overhearing, seemingly incut, says Robert Worden, of iowa, in vincible. Millions on millions of men and wemen have canght the blessed spirit by contagion. The boy on his mother's knee has caught the heavenly life from her. It is not simply that she taught ulm the words of the Lord's Prayer or the beatltudes; It is that she had seen the vision and he knew that shethad neen it and he opened his eyes; and ulso saw it. As he had heard the whisper of the Holy Spirit-and he knew she had heard it-he opened his ears to hear, and, lo, he, too, heard the whisper of the present Father. The There is before the Town Board, father, the mother and the child! The father and mother, and as years go on the boy is a father and the girl a mother, and there is another generation, another child lives in the divine life as it passes from them to him. The good God employa this Christian nature as one of the agencies by which his kingdom shall certainly come.—Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Unitarian,
